GENERAL NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Proposed Removal of Army Headquarters.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 24.

Gen. Sherman, who arrived in Washington this morning, called on the President previous to the cabinet meeting. During the forenoon the General was also at the War Department, and had a private consultation with Secretary Taft. The secretary is desirous that the headquarters of the army be again in this city, and there is reason to believe his views in this regard were freely mentioned to Sherman today. The Secretary thinks Sherman should resume his station here, and to the fullest extent have charge of the ordinary business belonging to his office. The consultation today was a brief one.

The Reorganization of the Army.—The Banning Bill Ordered Reported.

The committee on military affairs today agreed upon a bill to reorganize the army, it being Representative Banning's bill with some amendments, and ordered it to be reported favorably to the House. It does not reduce the present effective force of the army, but reduces the number of infantry regiments from twenty five to twenty, and the cavalry from ten to eight, thus reducing the number of infantry officers fifty five, cavalry officers fifteen, and increases the size of the companies and regiments. It does away with the regimental organization of artillery, reducing the field officers of artillery seventeen. It consolidates the quartermaster and commissary departments into one designated as the department of supplies, making a large reduction of officers. It provides for a board to examine officers, and for discharge of all worthless and inefficient officers, and for an examination of the condition of retired officers. All officers who lose their places under the bill are placed upon a list of supernumeraries, and are permitted to resign with one year's pay for each eight years of service, or remain in service to perform such duty as they may be assigned to. It provides for the education of non-commissioned officers and soldiers by the commissioned officers, and for the promotion of non-commissioned officers to commissioned officers. It abolishes the office of judge advocate, fixes the pay of first sergeants at $40 per month, makes the headquarters of the general of the army at Washington in time of peace, and provides that he may act as Secretary of War in the absence of the secretary or a temporary vacancy in the office. It provides that sutlers and post-traders shall be first elected by a council of administration, approved by the department commander, the general of the army, and appointed by the Secretary of War. It reduces the staff of all general officers, and requires the general of the army to report reforms to Congress annually, and to look to economy in all branches of the army. The bill is approved by the testimony of many of the best officers of the army. It is a reduction of about two hundred officers, and proposes reforms which, if adopted, will, it is claimed, add greatly to the efficiency of the army.

THE MARSHES.

Testimony of Husband and Wife Before Clymer's Committee.

Mrs. C. P. Marsh came into the room of the committee on expenditures in the War Department today, accompanied by her husband, who introduced her to Mr. Clymer. He informed her that they wished to examine her. She was then sworn. The examination was conducted by Mr. Danford. She testified that she left Cincinnati in 1865, where she formerly resided, but had lived in New York most of the time since that year. She had known Mrs. Bowers (now Mrs. Belknap) since 1860 and had been at the same hotel with her in Cincinnati four years. Cincinnati was her home, and she revisited that city twice a year, staying there two or four weeks. She met Mrs. Bowers in New York, where Mrs. Bowers was her guest. Mrs. Bowers was a widow at the time. Witness commenced housekeeping in New York in the Summer of 1871. She went to Europe in company with Mrs. Bowers the last of June, 1872, and knows that Pendleton's name was on the list of passengers. After further interrogation she was asked whether she had any conversation at any time with Mrs. Bowers (now Mrs. Belknap) relative to her interest in the Kentucky Central Railroad claim, and the answer was, "Two or three weeks ago at the Arlington Hotel." At this time witness asked Mrs. Belknap whether she ever received any money on account of the claim; witness told her she heard she received $70,000. Mrs. Belknap replied that the claim was only for $100,000, and how could I receive $70,000? During that conversation the witness was in a state of excitement and distress. Mrs. Belknap was a friend of hers, and the witness felt much interest on her account. She had simply mentioned to Mrs. Belknap an idle rumor. She had always talked to Mrs. Belknap as she would to a sister. She had heard the rumor for over a year. She related to General Kiddoo the conversation between her and Mrs. Belknap. She did not know of Mr. Pendleton paying money to Mrs. Belknap on account of the Kentucky Railroad claim or of making her presents. She never heard the Secretary of War say anything about the contract between her husband and Evans.

On the cross-examination by Mr. Robbins, witness said she understood Mrs. Belknap as denying that she received anything, and meant to convey that impression. In response to a question by Mr. Clymer, witness said she never saw Mr. Clymer but once, and that was three weeks go. It was at the breakfast table at the Arlington Hotel. Her husband presented her to Mr. Clymer, but their conversation had no reference to the matter before the committee.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SNOW STORM IN IOWA AND NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

CHICAGO, March 24.

Advices from points throughout Iowa and Northern Illinois indicate that a snow storm, commencing this morning and ending late tonight, has covered the ground in those sections to the depth of four to ten inches. This is the heaviest storm of the season, but as the weather is mild the snow is melting rapidly, and in a day or so will probably be gone.

FIRE.

At Fall River—Loss $3000.

FALL RIVER, Mass., March 24.

A fire occurred at one o'clock this morning in a building containing a store and eleven tenements on Snell street. It was owned by Thomas Booth, who was the only occupant. The loss on the building is estimated at $3000; insured $3000, each in the Ætna of Hartford and Phœnix of New York. The fire was caused by the peculiar construction of the chimney, the base of which rests upon the basement walls and sill of the house passing right through it. From this point the fire is supposed to have originated. A building built by the same contractors as the above was partially destroyed some time since, it is stated, from the same cause.

SEVERE RAINS IN ARKANSAS.

The Rivers Rising and Railroad Lines Damaged.

LITTLE ROCK, March 24.

This section has been visited by a heavy rain storm which proved very disastrous to all railroads. The Arkansas river is rising rapidly. The Ouachita, Saline and White are out of their banks and are flooding the country. The Iron Mountain Railroad is badly damaged in several places. The southern bound train this morning run into a washout six miles north of Malvern, ditching the engine, baggage, mail, express and one passenger car, injuring Thomas Elliott, mail agent, and Wm. Cassler, express messenger. North of Little Rock two washouts are reported. The Hot Springs Railroad is badly damaged, and trains will be detained a few days. The Texas trains are all delayed.

ARRIVAL OF CENTENNIAL EXHIBITS FROM BRAZIL AND FRANCE.

PHILADELPHIA, March 24.

The steamship Donati, from Rio Janeiro, which arrived in this port today, brought one thousand and five packages of Centennial exhibits, among which are nine hundred specimens of native woods. The French steamship Labrador, from Havre, arrived at this port this afternoon, having on board the exhibits forwarded by the French government for the Centennial.

REDUCTION OF FREIGHT RATES ON LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, March 24.

The following are the new rates on live stock, made by the general freight agents here: From Chicago to New York, 4½c; to Philadelphia, 40½c; to Baltimore, 39c; to Buffalo, 27c. The old rates were respectively: 60c, 51c, 25c, and 32½c. A reduction of 5c per hundred pounds will be made on boxed meats and malt, the new rates being 40c.

THREE MEN DROWNED ON THE FISHING BANKS.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., March 24.

Fishing schooner Edwin C. Dolliver arrived from Grand Banks this morning, having lost three of the crew: James Horton and Thomas Kennedy were lost on the banks March 4th. A dory was capsized while attending the trawls, and Nelson Mitchell was washed overboard and drowned March 11th, during a heavy sea.

THE WHISKEY TRIAL AT CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, March 24.

In the case of Pohlman, Rust & Co., this morning, Herman Becker, the former storekeeper for the firm who returned from Canada, lately, testified he had been cognizant of frauds committed by them and he had allowed such frauds. The usual method pursued was to use the stamps a second time. The distillery was sometimes run beyond its taxed capacity and the surplus was put on the market without the payment of tax. He produced a note for $1700 which he testified was given him in return for allowing these frauds. Ernest Mattorn testified that while storekeeper for Pohlman, Rust & Co. he had winked at frauds, and during less than a year had received $2500 from the firm as compensation therefor. The frauds committed were in running the distillery beyond its taxed capacity and in using stamps a second time. Both the proprietors understood this and made the bargain with him.

FROM NEW YORK.

DR. BUDDINGTON'S CHURCH WILL NOT MEDDLE IN THE PLYMOUTH MATTER.

NEW YORK, Mar. 24.

It was generally understood that some decided action would be taken by Dr. Buddington at the Clinton avenue church, Brooklyn, at the Friday evening prayer meeting. Nothing was done, however, as a feeling prevailed in the most influential circles of the church that any assumption of a similar position to that of Dr. Storrs would alienate many members who sustained the action of the advisory council. Dr. Buddington, after the service, which was of the ordinary character, stated that the church did not entertain any idea of taking action on the subject.

PUTTING HIS FOOT IN IT.—This class of turgid statements, so whimsically blended as to confirm the belief that the writer had been at a great feast of learning and stolen the "scraps," is not an uncommon result of my examinations of candidates for teachers' licenses. A few weeks since an applicant for license, who had graduated two or three years previously from one of the schools, wrote the following reply to the query—Name two important battles of the Revolution—of the second war with Great Britain—of the war with Mexico—and the Rebellion—stating which party were victorious:

"Two of the principal battles of the Revolution are Lexington, in which the Union forces were defeated, and Bull Run, which took place July 17, 1776. The two principal battles of the rebellion, one when Farragut sailed up the Gulf of Mexico and captured Louisiana, and also the battle of Cornwallis.] [Six battles of the Revolution—battle of Lexington, when the Unions were defeated; first battle of Bull Run, in which the English were victorious; second battle of Bull Run, in which the Americans were victorious; and the battle of Quebec, in which the victorious party was the English."—[Supt. Field of Brooklyn, in Journal of Education of N. Y.

DOMESTIC NUISANCES.

Do you know what they are? Did you ever try to lie down on them? They are hard, starchy things, with beautiful monograms embroidered all over them. They won't fold up, but rustle and slip off of the bed on the floor; they are always ready for a launch out into some place where they ought not to be. Back of them, as they are pinned on to the pillows, you can see the Sing Sing stripe of the vulgar ticking in which the imaginary goose-feathers are enclosed. Then, too, there is a broad, white, hard piece of embroidered linen, which goes across the bed, with a stiff, large monogram on it. This is also a "sham," and is always put on when strangers are coming into the room. It looks like a piece of fancy pie-crust. Oh, how a man hates these shams; how he flings them away when he is alone in the house, and tells the chambermaid never to bring them out while the wife and family are away! Why do women take such comfort with them? Why is the white counterpane so religiously guarded from the tired man when he wants to lie down, but don't want to fold up this thick article into its lawful creases, and put it away in the closet, and then take off the unmanageable "shams" and stow them away? Then there come the ladies. They are always coming off on your head and shoulders. "Pick up the tidy, dear!" This is about the last word from madam as you leave the room. "Don't put your head on the tidy!" This is the booming minute-gun of domestic danger when the cigar is lighted, and the newspaper is opened, and the home circle for the evening is begun. Then there are the white dresses for the children. Of course they will play on their hands and knees, and will get soiled and marred with nursery warfare; of course the servants will complain of the big wash, and the quantity of starched clothes required for the demands of the family wardrobe. "Why not dress the children in colored clothes? why not put woolen articles on them such as Mrs. A——'s children wear." "How queer you men talk! Don't you know that Mrs. A—— doesn't live on ——street, and doesn't go with our set at all? How mortified I should feel if Mrs. B—— should call and see the children dressed in a different way from her own?" That is the way the talk goes on between the public realities of bills and the domestic shams of embroidered white dresses. "It is worse than wicked, my dear," said Punch, the other day, representing a mother speaking to her little daughter. "It is worse than wicked—it is vulgar."—[Appleton's Journal.

PATENT

SPECTACLES.

The Advantages of the Parabola Glasses over the old form of Spectacles, are a greater density of material, perfect surfaces, and Parabolic form. These qualities, united, form the most perfect of lenses. In the perfect transmission of light, joined to their peculiar form the wearer of the Parabola Spectacles is enabled to prosecute the most trying labors of the eye without those distressing results which follow the use of all other glasses. A peculiar and important feature in these Spectacles is witnessed in cases where young persons have been obliged to resort to the use of glasses, from some physical debility having affected temporarily their vision. In such cases the eye soon regains its healthy powers, and the glasses can be laid aside without having had the least tendency to affect the eyes so as to demand their continuous use.

(From Dr. George McClellan, Philadelphia.)

I have recommended the "Parabola Spectacles" to several of my patients, and have received from most of them warm encomiums upon the article. They assert that these glasses do not fatigue the eyes by long use, as is apt to be the case with the double convex Spectacles, while the command of the eyes over the object of vision is much greater. This corresponds with the opinion any optician would form from his knowledge of the principles upon which those glasses are adjusted—so as to converge the rays coming from different quarters to the same focal distance. The eyes can be turned to a considerable extent, therefore, under these glasses, without involving the necessity of moving the head.

Price attached to furnace $8. Better pay for a Governor that will surely prevent the escape of poisonous gases from your furnace, than save your money, and breathe a tainted atmosphere, suffer from the inconvenience of coal dust, unevenly heated rooms, and danger from fire. SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1876.

THE DAY.

The eclipse is eclipsed this afternoon.

The House military affairs committee has obtained positive evidence of the extensive frauds in the contract for supplying headstones for national cemeteries, in which the late Secretary of War Belknap is implicated.

Mrs. William H. Osborne, of New York, daughter of the late Jonathan Sturgis, has purchased, for $65,000, Cozzens's Hotel at West Point, with forty acres adjacent, and presented the entire property to the governors of the New York hospital, to be used, under their directions, as a home for convalescents from every hospital in the city.

The bill to regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon was passed by the United States Senate yesterday. A motion for reconsideration has been entered. The House discussed at length the legislative appropriation bill, an animated debate arising on the proposition to reduce the salaries of Congressmen.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Marsh testified before the War Department committee yesterday, the former declaring that his sudden departure for Montreal was not suggested by Mr. Clymer, but that he left of his own volition. Mrs. Marsh averred that she never knew of Mr. Pendleton paying money to Mrs. Belknap on account of the Kentucky railroad claim, neither did she ever hear the Secretary of War say anything about the contract between her husband and Evans.

It is reported that Professor Seelye, Messrs. Payne and Willis of New York, Mr. Morrison and several of the hard money Republicans and Democrats are endeavoring to arrange a bill which shall secure the approval of the hard money men irrespective of party. The plan which has received the most favor comprehends, among other things, the redemption of the legal tenders in 4½ per cent. 30-year gold bonds and the destruction of the legal tenders thus redeemed.

THE CRUMP AND LOWDEN CASE.

To the Editor of the Daily News:—

Last Wednesday in your editorial entitled "A Superfluous Judiciary" you spoke with marked appropriateness concerning the strange manner in which the case of Crump, who murdered Lowden at the Cliff Cottages last Summer, has been disposed of, his case having within a few days been nol. prossed by the assistant attorney general. I think the great majority of your readers agree with you in saying that the grand jury should have put the homicide on trial for his life, and let a petit jury consider the mitigating circumstances. A very important witness, who saw the whole transaction, is now in the city, though he has not been summoned to give any testimony, nor has his evidence in any way yet been made public. Today he gave me the following narrative of the case as he saw it, and you will notice that it is important testimony.

"Last Summer I was a waiter at one of the Cliff Cottages. I had been there about a week when the difficulty occurred between Crump and Lowden. I saw the whole quarrel. It happened in this way. I went to the hotel after fruit. While I was waiting down in the kitchen for the head waiter to come and give it to me, I heard talking in a room near by where some of the waiters are accustomed to sleep. Presently Crump entered the room where I was, and I saw him go up to a table and take a carving knife, and walk to the outside door with the knife in his hand. Then I saw Lowden, coming from the same room where I had heard the talking, walking towards Crump; and I noticed that Lowden had his two hands together, over his waist, as though he was picking his finger nails. I did not see any knife, or anything, in his hands. As he walked towards Crump, holding his hands in that way, Crump said to him, "Now do what you're going to do." Lowden did not make any reply, but still kept walking towards Crump till he got within arm's reach of him, when he seized Crump by the two shoulders, as though he was going to shake him. Then they commenced a tussle together, and went up against the side of the house. At this moment I saw blood gushing out of Lowden's side, and the steward rushed up and separated the two. I did not at this time, or at any time, see a knife in Lowden's hand. Lowden did not make any threat against Crump, nor did he speak a word to Crump in my presence. Lowden did not speak for some moments after he was stabbed. After Lowden had been placed upon a mattress, perhaps six or ten minutes after he was stabbed, he asked for water, and asked a doctor to be sent for. I sat up with Lowden a while the night after he was stabbed, and he said to me 'I had no idea that Jerry meant to do as he did, and if I had he would have been in my place.' I said to him, 'Did you not see Jerry have the knife?' He said, 'Yes, but I did not think he would use it.' He was in much pain, and very weak from loss of blood, and I did not have much conversation with him, and he did not say to me that he intended to do any harm to Crump. My own idea was, as I looked upon the difficulty, that they were only fooling together, and from his manner I do not think Lowden intended to inflict injury upon Crump."

The above testimony, and all other testimony bearing upon the case, should have been submitted to a court of justice. To allow Crump to escape a trial, even though his victim was a poor and obscure man, is a mockery of law, an offence against the peace of society, and a contempt put upon the sacredness of human life. EQUITY.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

The services of Lent are attended with much interest in New York and Brooklyn, and an unusual number of courses of lectures are announced.

The Westminster church (Presbyterian) was dedicated recently, in Elizabeth, N. J. The cost was $200,000, and there is no debt remaining.

The business men's daily prayer meeting, which has been held for two months in the Rialto building, Baltimore, has proved to be so successful that the executive committee have determined to make it permanent. It is attended by 200 business men, and lasts exactly half an hour each day.

At the anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society, held last month in New Orleans, it was stated that of the 160,000 families living in Louisiana and the part of Mississippi under the society's jurisdiction, 40,000 were without copies of the Bible. Of the 12,775 families visited in New Orleans, 3511 were found destitute of copies of the Scriptures.

As many as 6,000 persons attended the farewell meetings of Messrs. Whittle and Bliss at St. Louis. There were two services and the number present was estimated to be 12,000 in all. At the close of the second service $1,000 were raised and offered to the evangelists as an expression of the appreciation of the value of their services. The money was, however, declined.

The archbishop of Canterbury, with his usual comprehensiveness, thinks that while his clergy are discussing the propriety of holding fellowship with the Oriental and the old Catholic churches, they should not forget the claims of the many Protestant denominations around them, who are more in sympathy with Protestant principles than those Oriental churches.

The Philadelphia letter of this week in the Evangelist says that new importance is now given there to the conversion of children in the churches. The writer thinks that "there will be less of this shying off from child experiences and more readiness to accept as a test the grace of love, where in the nature of the case the hard fought law work must have less prominence."

The Transactions of the Friends of Religious Enlightenment in St. Petersburg, Russia, present new and interesting aspects of Russian thought and tendency. The report for 1874-75 is drawn up by Colonel Alexander Kirieff, aid de camp to the Grand Duke Constantine, to whom it is addressed. It abjures all political ends, and deals solely with the moral and religious aspects of the Old Catholic movement, with which it sympathizes, especially as that movement was represented at the recent Bonn conference.

A new religious society has been organized at Marlboro, Mass., under the name of "The Marlboro Christian Fraternity," upon an entirely unsectarian basis. Its principles of action could not be objected to by any sect. They are these.

"Right to be shunned; the utmost care to be taken against wounding each other's feelings; each new step or plan to be carefully considered and not to be adopted unless it shall command a two-thirds vote of the members present; misunderstandings and opposition to be disarmed by persistent frankness and kindness, the unity, purity, and prosperity of our churches to be kept ever in mind; and the sayings, doings, and teachings of our Lord to be the arbiter in all our differences.

From Kobe, Japan, the mail brings a copy of the first edition of the first Christian newspaper published in that empire. Its name, idiomatically translated, is the Weekly Messenger, and its editor is Rev. O. H. Gulick, of the American Board. The aim of the Messenger is to become "an educator and a friendly ally of every enlightening, civilized, and Christianizing influence in the land." In order that it may reach the common people, the characters used will be the "Kana," which all the natives can read. The Japanese scholars and literary men ignore this as low and vulgar but the paper is not meant for them unless they choose to read it. This newspaper experiment will be watched with interest; it may prove a power.

The Young Men's Christian Association at Scranton, Pa., presents in its seventh annual report facts and figures showing a good work done. $1,252 have been expended, including $2,117 to liquidate debts of former years, and 500 volumes have been added to the library. From the extended tabular statement of H. H. Chapin, general secretary, we take the following:

Employment found for	210
Visits to sick	718
Relief to poor	674
Tippling houses closed	13
Saloons closed about	100
Houses of prostitution closed	18
Gambling houses broken up	6
Prayer meetings held	131
Noon meetings at shops	33
Visitors at rooms, about	50,000
Persons attending meetings	27,000
Tracts and pages distributed	14,000
Number of conversions, about	70

Professor Swing's new church in Chicago adopted the following article of faith at a recent meeting, and about 300 persons affixed their names to it: "We, whose names are signed to this paper, earnestly desiring to promote our own spiritual welfare, and to take some part in the great work of helping others to lead the Christian life, living in a large city where the moral work to be done is very great, do form ourselves into a Christian society to be known as the Central church of Chicago. We would found our church upon the great doctrines of the New Testament. We believe in the divine character and mission of Christ; that He is the Saviour which man in his sinfulness and darkness needs; that all those believing and following this Christ are entitled to the name of Christians. Furthermore, as at the Holy Communion many leading evangelical churches cordially invite to the supper all who love the Lord in sincerity and truth, so we, feeling that no service of the sacrament is holier than its communion, would invite into full membership all who make this Saviour their way, truth, and life."

AN OPINION AS IS AN OPINION.—Mr. Richard H. Dana, Jr. has proven himself to be a self-conceited and over-weening ass. With his nose exalted high in the air, he assumes a disdain of politics, politicians and statesmen, and wrapping the drapery of his self-exaltation about him, practically defies the Senate committee having his nomination in charge to reject him. He evidently belongs to that class of New Englanders who despise the masses of the people, and go upon the hustings dressed in white kids and steel-pen coats. He is altogether too good and pure a man to represent America at the court of St. James. He should be sent to the Guano Islands, where the aristocratic elevation of his nose would be more natural and his surroundings congenial.—[Washington National Republican.

HENRY COGGESHALL.—Captain Henry Coggeshall, a well known citizen of Bristol, R. I., died on the 22d inst., aged 87 years. He was a native of Middletown, and for many years a packet master. He also made several voyages to the West Indies. During the war of 1812 he arrived off Newport in a schooner, bound from Trinidad to Bristol. Learning that Newport harbor was blockaded by British vessels, he undertook to pilot his craft through Seaconnet river around Commonfence point and through Bristol ferry into Newport Harbor, a difficult feat in the night, but one in which he was successful.—[Boston Journal.

LOCAL AFFAIRS.

—The storm signal is up.

—The First Artillery band will play at the Unitarian centennial tea party.

—E. M. Willett is to sail for Europe soon. His villa here will be occupied by his son.

—Sergeant Foster of the signal office has been elected a member of the Historical Society.

—George Denniston, Jr., is going to move his grocery store to the brick building on Ferry wharf, opposite the police station.

—We have it on the best authority that James Gordon Bennett will not occupy August Belmont's residence here next Summer.

—The New York Graphic of last evening contains a sketch of the collision between the Old Colony and the Eolus on Tuesday.

—The schooner Matanzas, of Boston, Capt. Hammond, from Calais, Me., for this port, went ashore during the gale of Tuesday, near Machias, Me., and will probably be a total loss.

—On Thursday the Henry B. Anthony, Capt. Rose, went to Block Island in the morning and returned in the afternoon, arriving before dark. This is a remarkable feat, and one that the weather seldom makes possible.

—The deputy chief of police of Boston, has telegraphed to City Marshal Simmons, that he has arrested A. J. Boyd, the man who advertised "Music boxes for three dollars," by which H. M. Reilly was swindled. Capt. Hammond has gone to Boston for him.

—James F. Stevens has sold his right, title and interest in a lot of land, 99x180 feet, on Warner street, and buildings. Also a lot of land, 25 feet on Thames street by 210 feet on Marlborough street extended, with buildings, to Thomas Stevens, on private terms.

—The trades procession will take place on Tuesday, the 9th of May, if the weather is favorable. It is proposed to have four bands, the Newport, First Artillery, Middletown and Cornet band of Newport and efforts will be made to interest the tradesmen of the city generally so that there may be as full a turnout as possible. The arrangements will be under the charge of Stephen S. Vars as last year and we understand that he will begin to move in the matter next week.

—We learn that the Rogers High School orchestra have engaged the great cornet player D. W. Reeves of Providence as a soloist. As showing the musical standing of Mr. Reeves it may be mentioned that Levy and Arbuckle who have justly first class reputations as musicians have been concertizing lately at Worcester, Fall River and Providence under the direction of Mr. Reeves. Prof. Frank, the popular teacher of music in our schools, who is an excellent soloist on the flute, will furnish solos on that instrument. The rehearsal of the chorus Thursday night was so enjoyable that its participants are quite enthusiastic and are considering a permanent organization.

MR. PRATT'S ILLNESS.—Frederick A. Pratt went to Providence yesterday to participate in the legislative visit to the state prison, but was taken violently ill on the boat. Dr. R. J. Arnold was on board and with the assistance of Capt. S. C. Bailey Mr. Pratt was rubbed until medical attendance in Providence could be secured. Morphine was injected into his arm, and after a considerable period of severe pain he was relieved. He remained on the boat all day, the officers and the stewardess doing everything they could for his comfort. On the boat's arrival here he was taken to his home on School street by Dr. Arnold and he is today very much better.

THE REAL AND THE IDEAL.—A gentleman who spent Monday night on board the Old Colony was unfortunately not informed that the boat would not leave her berth, and suffered the horrors of sickness about the hour the boat should have been rounding Point Judith, for he knew it was a very rough night. Early in the morning he went on deck and admired the scenery of the approaches to New York until he found that the boat had not left Newport. The saddest part of it is that he was not alone, but accompanied by his wife who can twit him about it when he puts his feet on the piano, or objects to her having two or three windows open.

THOMAS J. LYNCH—president of the Knights of St. Patrick, caught a severe cold on St. Patrick's day which turned into pneumonia and he died at two o'clock this morning. His funeral will be attended by the Knights of St. Patrick.

Mr. Lynch was born in the parish of Keeldingle, county of Kerry, Ireland, in 1831. He came to this country in 1846 and landed in this city. He has been in business here the past twenty years, and has always been respected as a man of sterling integrity, and has been very popular among business men. He leaves a wife and four children.

THE IRISH SOLDIER IN THE WAR.—Gen. Kilpatrick gave his lecture last evening entitled the "Irish Soldier" at the Opera House under the auspices of Stevens Post, No. 2, G. A. R. The audience was small and the receipts lacked about $70 of paying expenses. The Newport band gave several excellent selections outside the Opera House before the commencement of the lecture and they played one tune inside after the lecturer made his appearance on the platform. The lecture was all the press has said of it in places where he has been called upon to deliver it. The description of battles in which Irishmen figure were extremely interesting and the numerous thrilling anecdotes of battle during the late war were received with frequent and hearty applause. He spoke highly of Gen. John A. Logan, Gen. Sheridan, Gen Sherman, Gen. Phil. Kearney and others, but made no mention of Gen. Grant. His lecture gave great satisfaction and it is a pity that the post failed to make money on it.

VISIT TO THE STATE FARM.

Through the courtesy of Postmaster Coggeshall, of the state board of charities, quite a Newport party went to the state farm yesterday in company with Gov. Lippitt, Lieut. Gov. Sisson and the members of the General Assembly. On arriving in Providence the party found a special train waiting for them on the Hartford and Fishkill road which carried them as far as Oak Lawn. Here they entered large omnibusses and were driven to the state farm in the town of Cranston.

The superintendent of the farm, Norman W. Bayres, of this city, received the guests and Mr. Coggeshall, after introducing the governor to him, requested the party to fall into line and keep so if possible in making the inspection of the various departments.

The insane asylum was visited first. The inmates appeared to be glad to see the company and watched all their movements attentively. The old almshouse, nursery, store house, bakery, laundry, engine room and house of correction were visited. All these places were thoroughly inspected and about one hour was occupied in making the tour. In the upper part of the house of correction a grand collation was served which was partaken of with relish by all as their appetites had been sharpened by the long ride and subsequent survey of the buildings and grounds. There were no speeches, but there was plenty of conversation. After dinner the new and handsome barn was visited and all agreed that it was the finest structure of the kind they had ever seen. After this the horses, cows, pigs, etc., were looked at, when the allotted time was up and the party were in the omnibusses on their way to the city where they arrived at about 20 minutes of 4. The Newport party were obliged to omit the visit to the state prison, but the others, accompanied by the governor, made the tour of that institution.

DUTIES OF A MOTHER.—She should be firm, gentle, kind, always ready to attend to her child. She should never laugh at him—at what he does that is cunning—never allow him to think of his looks, except to be neat and clean in all his habits. She should teach him to obey a look—to respect those older than himself; she should never make a command without seeing that it is performed in the right manner. Never speak of the child's faults or foibles, or repeat his remarks before him. It is a sure way to spoil a child. Never reprove a child when excited, nor let your tone of voice be raised when correcting. Strive to inspire love, not dread—respect, not fear. Remember you are training and educating a soul for eternity. Teach your children to wait upon themselves, to put away a thing when done with it. But do not forget that you were once a child.—[California Farmer.

VALUATION AND TAXATION.—An interesting table prepared for the New York Bulletin exhibits the population, wealth, taxation and indebtedness of fourteen leading cities of the Union. It appears from this that the valuation of Baltimore increased 68 per cent. from 1860 to 1875; that of Boston 148 per cent.; that of Chicago 720 per cent.; that of Cincinnati 95 per cent.; that of Louisville 162 per cent.; that of New York 300 per cent.; that of Philadelphia 207 per cent.; that of St. Louis 174 per cent.; and that of San Francisco 600 per cent. The increase of taxation is greater than that in valuation. In the decade and a half from 1860 to 1875, the taxes in Baltimore increased 110 per cent., in Boston 211 per cent.; in Brooklyn 343 per cent.; in Chicago 1115 per cent.; in Cincinnati 377 per cent.; in Louisville 318 per cent.; in Milwaukee 826 per cent.; in New York 430 per cent.; in Philadelphia 317 per cent.; in St. Louis 301 per cent.; and in San Francisco 538 per cent. The indebtedness shows a growth more like that of the taxes than of the wealth. The indebtedness of Baltimore has increased 83 per cent.; that of Boston 238 per cent.; of Brooklyn 356 per cent.; of Chicago 187 per cent.; of Cincinnati 300 per cent.; of Louisville 86 per cent.; of Milwaukee 127 per cent.; of New York 504 per cent.; of Philadelphia 152 per cent.; of St. Louis 257 per cent.; of San Francisco 45 per cent. The aggregate population of the fourteen cities has grown, in the fifteen years, from 2,875,-157 to 4,968,609, an increase of 70 per cent.

THE TRUE PRINCIPLE OF TAXATION.

To the Editor of the Providence Journal:—

"The universal cause acts not by partial but by general laws!" That this is the perfect rule of Divine government but few will deny. By parity of reasoning, the laws that are instituted by man should, so far as the finite can partake of the infinite, be patterned after the Divine order.

A board of insurance directors will tell us that God's lightning is as like to fall on the spire of the church as it is on the gambling saloon, and hence the same premium that is asked to insure, all other things being equal, the one is demanded for the other.

Property of every kind is so made and vested in the individual by virtue of law. What the law recognizes as property government is bound to protect and defend within the common meaning and limits of the law, whether it be a building dedicated to the worship of God, or a gambling saloon or grog shop devoted to the service of the devil. The midnight robber who enters and plunders the one of its dice or its gin, is equally amenable under the law with him who enters and steals the chalice from the other.

And so with all other property, including seminaries of learning and charitable institutions, that do not belong exclusively to the public. From public property it is self evident that no available revenue can be obtained; nor should any be attempted, as it must inevitably result in a loss to the government of the cost of collection.

Apparently, there are many cases of hardship growing out of the undeviating administration of the law of the infinite. How then, can man expect that the finite laws of his making shall work better results?

If God in his infinite wisdom has ordained that greater good must emanate, in the aggregate, from universal than from partial laws, how arrogant in man to suppose that he can, in the framing of his finite system of civil government, guard against abuses, that must in the nature of things, ultimately outweigh the good results that are sought to be obtained by special enactments!

It has been well said, that "power is ever stealing from the many to the few," and the testimony of all past history, sacred and profane, is stereotyped with evidences of the fact; and that whenever individuals or corporations have acquired, or been trusted by the people with irresponsible power, they have been sure in the long run to abuse it: and nowhere has this truism been more fully exemplified than in church history, especially since the date of its union with the state in the seventh century.

This was simply a union between king and nobles, with pope and priests, by which the engine of government was run for nearly a thousand years, almost exclusively for the benefit of the two estates; the community or third estate being treated by both the others as beasts of burden created for their use.

It is true that universities of learning were established in ten different kingdoms at an early date, but then these were appropriated solely for the education of the temporal and spiritual rulers of the people, the last named being utterly denied the first rudiments of education, and even put to death for the crime of reading the Scriptures.

Nor was their condition greatly benefited in England, after the noble and baronial orders wrenched, in the reign of Edward the Third, more than half of the national domain from the hands of the clergy into whose possession it had been subtilely passing through the revenues obtained from untaxed church property and the death-bed bequests of hell-scared wealthy sinners for centuries.

Nor again was the condition of the common people greatly altered for the better when Henry the Eighth and his successors added the papal tiara to their kingly crown, and lorded it over the three kingdoms of England, Scotland and Ireland, (that in the language of prophecy were torn from the ten by the little horn or power that came up last,) in the two-fold quality of priest and king, as typified by the lion and the unicorn on Britain's escutcheon, "fighting for the crown."

Even in our day nowhere in England is to be found such inveterate opposers of common school education as is manifested by the bishops in the House of Lords, some of whom possess incomes compelled by force of law from the unwilling hands of the working classes vieing with the richest princes of the East in magnitude.

Such, too, have ever been the evils resulting from a union of church and state in every age of the world, even in our own country, and up to the time when that greatest light of the age, the but little learned Baptist minister, Roger Williams, was inspired from Heaven to utter the sentiment, "That a flourishing civil state may stand and be best maintained with full liberty in religious concernments." A sentiment which will yet, even though the people of Rhode Island, where Williams's experiments were first essayed, should prove recreant to this trust, continue to resound from human lips until every vestige of ecclesiastical and kingly tyranny shall be annihilated throughout the world.

And where in our midst do we find the chiefest foes of the education of the people at large, on which all honest and thoughtful men admit hangs the destinies of our country? Where but as ever in the bishops and ecclesiastical rulers of the church.

Under the plea or pretense of establishing charitable institutions, whole blocks in the best streets of our cities have been stolen through the action of the officials they have hoisted by the suffrages of their ignorant worshippers and dupes into office, whilst throughout the length and breadth of our land the subtle, crafty emissaries of a foreign priestly power are moving heaven and earth to pervert the common fund we have provided for the free education of the whole people, irrespective of race, religion or condition, into channels that will best conduce to keep the future suffragists of the country in stolid ignorance of all that relates to the science of civil and religious freedom, and pledge their first and foremost allegiance to a foreign ecclesiastical despot, whose bishops are even now not only openly threatening and denouncing our form of government, but throwing out from their pulpits both covert and open threatenings of what we as individuals and heretics are to expect at their hands when they obtain the necessary power to carry out in full their wicked medieval designs.

Nor are these dark plottings against the future freedom of the people of our country confined to one denomination of religionists alone. Year after year convocations from credal churches meet in public, having for their avowed object the commencement of a union of church and state by the introduction into our national constitution of a religious test-oath, that will, if accomplished and enforced, shut out of office and from the polls, some millions of the best and most intelligent men in the United States, thus leaving the balance of power in the hands of the ecclesiastics who rule in the churches.

Does it then become us to violate, not only the spirit but the express words and implications of our state constitution, that we may bestow a bounty in shape of an exemption from taxation on institutions that always have been foes to human liberty, and are now laboring, (whether ignorantly or otherwise is immaterial) to effect the destruction of our Republican institutions.

Forbid it, high heaven! Let us not even hesitate at including in our laws a general provision, laying even private seminaries, hospitals and charitable institutions; for departure from principle, even for the best of purposes, seldom or ever occurs that may not form a precedent, as in the instance of the blocks ceded by a neighboring city that may not be made a precedent of by designing bad men in power for the opening of a door for the admission of the worst abuses. Let us complete what old Roger Williams so nobly began, and perfect our own constitution requiring a complete separation of church and state, and of the state from all private enterprises, for our forefathers never intended the government they founded at so much cost of blood and treasure should be more than a shield to protect the people, and not a sword to compel unwilling citizens to support institutions with which they have no personal connection and perhaps but little sympathy. Let us make a clean thing of it, and let all property that is made so by law be equally protected by the law, and made to contribute alike for the maintenance of law, whatever may be its character or the uses it is applied to.

If anything that is now made property by law, should become an unbearable nuisance, annihilate it by law: but until then tax on the same plane the church and the gambling saloon, the private school and the grog shop, the hospital and the bowling alley, and depend upon it enough new sinecures will be raised up to pay all the extra imposts that may be levied in consequence on deserving institutions.

The Only Way to Conquer Dyspepsia.

It is perfectly preposterous to introduce pepsin and other artificial solvents into the stomach in the expectation that they will assist digestion by acting on the food itself. They will not. Nor is it possible thus to overcome dyspepsia. The only way to conquer that disorder, and prevent the numerous diseases and disabilities which it assuredly provokes, is to renew the activity of gastric action, by strengthening the stomach. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters eradicates the most inveterate forms of indigestion by restoring vitality to the alimentary organs and those which are tributary to them. The liver, the bowels, the kidneys and the nerves, no less than the stomach, experience the invigorative effects of that standard tonic, which possesses alterative properties that greatly enhance its beneficial influence, and give a permanence to its effects which they would not otherwise possess. THOMPSON'S POMADE OPTIME, for dressing the hair.—This fine pomade merits special attention. Purely vegetable, its effect is to soften and refine coarse dry hair, imparting to it gloss and beauty. Unlike many preparations for the hair, it cannot injure, but is highly beneficial, equally so, to the rich golden haired tresses of youth, the darker shades of middle life, or the silver streaked locks of age. 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by druggists.

Dr. Schenck's Standard Remedies.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed, mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country. mar2-2m-no

SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1876.

Madame La Fontaine.

Paris. A large house, white, richly gilded inside, with much red velvet on the chairs and couches. A house divided into many suites of apartments, each suite occupying an entire stage. Our story has to do with the troisieme stage.

Madame La Fontaine had been three months in the residence when this story commences.

"She must have been very beautiful years ago," thought the world who saw her, as they looked upon her regular features and large black eyes. Her complexion was deadly pale, save when art lent its assistance to nature, when rouge and blanc-de-perle met in not altogether friendly rivalry on her deeply-furrowed brow and her thin, pale cheeks; her hair was as white as snow, her expression was one of deep melancholy. People felt that this woman had a painful past; that for her there was no future.

It was about 10 o'clock in the morning. Paris was quite awake, with only an exception here and there. One of those exceptions was the troisieme etage in the street at the back of the boulevards.

A large room, nearly dark. Although it was 10 o'clock, it would have been quite dark in this room had it not been for a wax-candle burning in a silver candelabra placed in the centre of a green baize covered table. On the chairs and tables, cards; on the sideboard, cards again, and a dice box; on the ormolu table supporting the looking glass, cards, and a half emptied champagne bottle. There was no doubt about it; the suit of apartments in the street at the back of the boulevards was used by Madame La Fontaine as a gambling-house.

A man servant was putting the place to rights. So occupied was he with his own thought that he did not hear a knock on the outer door. The knock was repeated, and then the handle was turned, and a gentleman entered the room.

He was an old man. He was thin and sallow, and wore a white neckcloth. He carried a gold headed stick, and spoke sharply. He was blunt, and evidently prided himself upon his nationality. After this description, need it be said that he was an Englishman?

"H'm! a very nice place indeed!" he exclaimed, looking through a pair of double eye-glasses at the room and its contents; a nice place indeed. Cards and dice? A gambling house and for its custodian a ruffian."

"Who's that calling me a ruffian?" cried the man servant.

"My name is Dr. Abernethy Blunt, and I have come here to give you five Napoleons, if you earn them."

"That alters the case, sir. Business is business. But I ain't a ruffian. A gentleman left me here to starve (he brought me from England a valet,) and madame here took pity upon me. She gave me this place, and I never met a kinder woman."

"The keeper of a gambling house, kind?"

"It seems strange, don't it? and yet its gospel true. She's not at all a bad sort, take my word for it. But about them five Napoleons, sir?"

"Look here, my good friend," said the doctor. "I'll tell you what I want as briefly as I can. I have a ward—a young fellow who was left to my care by his father, a very dear friend of mine. This boy fell in love with a young lady. Her father would not let him marry her, and he ran away to Paris. The young lady fell ill, her father relented, and I have come here bearing his blessing to young Hopeful; but young Hopeful has disappeared."

"Well, sir?"

"I have been to the French detectives; they are every whit as stupid as their Englbrethren. At the last moment I came across a French doctor, who gave me a clue—that clue led me here. Now do you see how you can earn your five Napoleons?"

'Not quite, sir."

"I want you to tell me if, within the last week, a young Englishman has been to this house? Whether he has been seen by Dr. Naudin (my informant)? Whether he is here now?"

"Well, sir, I will trust to your honor about the Naps, and tell you all I know about it. Yes, sir, a young Englishman has been here during the last seven days. He came about a week ago. He was happy when he came; he grew happier and happier tossing off bottle after bottle of champagne, until he fell under that there table."

"Well?"

"Well, sir, as a general rule, it's my duty to turn out the drunk and incapables, for we must keep the house select; but on this occasion madame stepped in. She seemed struck by his face. She started as if she had been shot through the heart. She ordered me to carry him to the small room next her own. On the following day he was in a fever, crying about 'Kate,' and his 'lost love,' and all sorts of foolishness."

"Delirium," said the doctor. "And what did madame do?"

"Why, sir, she watched over him like a mother over a child. When the doctor said he might die, she cried as if her heart would break. You would have never believed she could feel so deeply, had you not seen her. She's as cool as a cucumber when she keeps the bank."

"Very strange," murmured the doctor. Then louder. "But you have not told me his name."

"Well, sir, until today, he has scarcely been sensible. Last night the fever seemed to leave him and madame would not let him talk. Just before I came here to do up the room I saw the French doctor and he told me the crisis was over; that he only wanted strength to be quite well. He is getting up. I found this photograph in his coat pocket."

"Five Napoleons for your story, and an extra one for the photograph and some further assistance," said the doctor, paying out the gold.

"Thank you, sir; here's the photograph."

"My ward," murmured the doctor. "And now tell this young gentleman that I am waiting for him. You know my name; mention it, and he will come to me."

"Certainly sir said the servant, and he approached the door.

"Stop!"

The doctor and the servant turned sharply round. The door was open. Madame La Fontaine had entered the room.

"You can leave us, John," she said. "Whatever this gentleman has to say he will say to me. No, do not go by that door; wait below."

Madame La Fontaine seated herself calmly in a fauteuil, and, motioning the doctor to a chair, asked a question.

"And, now, monsieur, what do you want here?"

The question received no reply. The doctor's face had become a study. His jaw had fallen, his eyes were fixed; he was evidently startled and surprised.

"You do not answer me," said madam. "However, I think I know the cause of your visit. You believe that at my receptions cards and dice are permitted. You are right, they are. But my receptions are held at 8 in the evening not 10 in the morning. Monsieur, shall I say au revoir?"

There was a pause, and then the doctor exclaimed: "We have met before."

"Very likely," replied madame, calmly. "I am a great traveler, and you may have seen me in Vienna, Wiesbaden, Spar."

"This is the first time I have been away from England, and I left London for Paris last night."

"Indeed!" said madame, not quite so calmly. "Well, monsieur, what do you want with me?"

"My ward," replied the doctor, shortly. "I have traced him here, and I have come to take him back with me."

"Your ward!"

"Madame, there is not the least reason for your astonishment. Your servant has confessed all to me. My ward is here, and here I remain until he leaves the house in my company."

"And are not his wishes to be consulted?"

"Certainly not. He is the son of a man who was one of my dearest friends. He will come with me."

He was thinking the while, "It is she. I cannot be mistaken." She was thinking the while, "This man may be bent, he cannot be broken."

"Monsieur, I will make a friend of you. Long ago I had a son; that son was lost to me, but not by death. When I saw the pale face of your ward, my heart yearned towards him. It seemed as if my child had been restored to me. I have watched over him long and tenderly. Do not take him from me."

The doctor murmured, "There is something in human nature, after all;" and then he said:

"You shall decide for yourself, madame."

She bowed her head and sighed a sigh of intense relief.

"You were surprised when I told you that we had met before, and not on the continent. "I met you in England."

"In England!" She was clutching spasmodically the arms of her chair, and her face was paler than ever.

"In England," repeated the doctor, watching her earnestly. "And now, if it will not trouble you, I will tell you a little bit of a family history."

She was silent.

"An Englishman married a wayward girl—a French woman—frivolous, fickle, false. A son was the result of the marriage. At the end of three years the French wife left the English husband, in the company of one of her countrymen. My story, which you will admit is not a very long one, is over."

"But why do you tell me this?"

"Because you were the French wife; and the English husband, Henry Gordon, was my dead friend."

"He is dead!" she exclaimed.

"You have betrayed yourself, madame."

"No, no!" she said, with an effort. "You startled me. Long ago I knew Monsieur Gordon and his miserable, unhappy wife. But you are mistaken; my name is Madame La Fontaine."

"Madame, I have nothing more to say. I am waiting for my ward."

"I tell you," she cried excitedly, "you shall not take him from me. What is your authority?"

"I represent his father, Henry Gordon. You see my claim is a good one."

She paused for a moment and turned deadly pale. Then she looked the doctor full in the face, and said, "I have a better. You are right, monsieur, I was the wife of your dead friend; and, as that wife, I claim the guardianship of my child."

"And it is here you would recognize your son! You would meet him as the keeper of a gambling-house?"

Then she broke down. "Man, man!" she cried, "have you no pity. Is there no return? Ah!" Her hand was placed to her heart; she seemed to be fainting.

The doctor approached her. "You are ill."

"No, no!" she murmured; "I am very often like this."

The doctor's face changed. For the first time he regarded her with pity. "I repeat you are ill, very ill, and I dare not excite you further. I have but little to say. You claim the guardianship of your son. So be it. I came here to save him. I brought with me the consent of the father of the woman he loves to the marriage. You are his mother, and I tell you this. I leave his fate in your hands. I will return in half an hour, and then you will have decided whether he is to come with me, free and joyous, or with his head bowed to the dust in sorrow and shame, a dishonored man. Mind, I return for your answer in half an hour," and he was gone.

She stared into vacancy with sightless eyes, and then nature came to her rescue. The tears welled up and relieved the breaking heart. "My son!" she murmured, "I know it; my heart told me so when I stooped over him on that dreadful night, when I thought all was lost—that he had come back to his mother's arms but to die. To die! no, that is all over. He will live, and be a great joy to me. But how shall I tell him I how shall I tell him!"

"Dr. Blunt!"

A weak voice. She started up, and found a young man (nearly 20) standing before her. He evidently was convalescent from some serious illness.

She rushed up to him. "You are imprudent," she said, caressingly. "What would the doctor say if he were to see you now? Come this is no obedience."

"I feel so much better today," he replied. "But was not that the voice of Dr. Blunt? You know him!"

"He used to know me years ago;" and then she said warningly, "But you must return to your room. You must not stay here."

"Why not?"

"It is not so comfortable as your own. Come," and she tried to lead him to the door.

"Stay," said he in a faint voice. "For the first time I collect my thoughts. Where am I? I remember being feverish and ill. There were cards and lights. Then all seemed a blank until I saw your face as it bent over mine. I had seen your face somewhere before. Where was it?

"You must not excite yourself," she murmured, still trying to lead him from the room. "Come."

He looked round. "Ah, I know this room! It is the gambling-house that has haunted me in my dreams. And you—ah! remember you now—you are the woman who dealt the cards. Don't touch me!" And he cast her from him.

She sighed deeply, and said, "You can stay here now."

And so it is with you," he continued excitedly, "who has played the Good Samaritan. "You, who live but to deceive, have saved my life. The gift is valueless when it is received from your hands."

"You do not know what you say; she cried in a pleading voice. "Look in my face," she cried. "Read there the sacrifice I have made for you. Cannot you see the hand of death?" And then, with a revulsion of feeling, she repressed herself. "No, no, it was freely given. But you should have pity upon me, child. You should have pity;" and she buried her face with her hands.

Frank was silent for a few minutes, and he said, "I am wrong. You have been very good to me. See, I am sorry; forgive me."

"Ah! if you only knew how much you had to forgive me!"

"Oh do not trouble yourself on that score. I was desperate, and there are scores of houses such as yours in Paris. I shall never be able to repay you for your kindness."

"You can pay me," she cried quickly.

"Ah," he said, "you have seen my guardian. Dr. Blunt has told you that I am not quite a pauper; that I have money."

"Do not insult me!" she exclaimed. "You can repay me. Oh, Frank, Frank, you are young, and are spending your youth in dissipation. Where do I meet you? In a gambling-house, your blood fevered with wine! For Heaven's sake promise me never to touch a card again."

"This from you," he said: "the keeper of a gambling house!"

"And who should know better the miseries of play? For Heaven's sake, promise me never to touch a card again. You hear what I say—what I pray?" And again her hand went to her heart and her face became ghastly.

"You are ill!" he cried.

"No; give me your answer. Quick, quick!"

"There, I promise you."

"Thank heaven for that!" and she sank into a chair.

"You are better now," he said, leaning over her. "You have overtasked your strength in nursing me through my illness. And I was brute enough to reproach you! But tell me, why did you take such an interest in me?"

She hesitated. "You reminded me of a son who was very dear to me. A son who is lost to me."

"Poor mother!"

"Oh, say that again!" she cried, "and yet you should have said 'poor son!' And so this Dr. Blunt is a great friend of yours?"

"Yes. He was the bosom friend of my poor dear father."

She looked at him with troubled eyes, and then said: "You call your father poor—you speak of him in a tone of sympathy; had he any sorrow?"

She waited anxiously for the answer.

"No."

She looked surprised. "How shall I tell him?" she murmured; and then, more to gain time than my other reason, she said:

"Dr. Blunt is a very clever man?"

"Yes," replied Frank, with a smile. "He has been very kind to me. Since my father's death he has been my guardian; and, as my guardian, he has given in to all my whims. It is one of theories that a patient should never be thwarted in his wishes. And, in his eyes, every man and woman in the world is a patient."

"Supposing I had a whim?"

"Then you may be sure that the doctor would insist upon its being gratified."

"You shall represent the doctor," said Madame La Fontaine, with a forced laugh. Then she added, earnestly "I have a whim. It is that you should take the place of my lost son. Oh, not for long—only for a little while. I have so longed to be able to speak to him. You are very like that he would have been had he been left to me. You will not refuse me?"

"But it is such a strange request!" and then as he looked into her pleading, tear-dimmed eyes, he added, "I consent."

For a moment she was silent, and then she whispered tenderly and lingeringly, as if she wished the words to last forever, "My son!"

"And now," she continued. "I am going to be very frank with you. It is a bitter grief to find me here, is it,—the keeper of a gambling house? You can never forgive me?"

"Let us not speak of that," he said, turning aside his head.

"You are right," she replied quickly. "No, let me only remember the bitter sorrow I have undergone—the days and nights of repentance. But it was too late! too late!" She paused for a moment, and then continued: "I married when I was little more than a child. My husband, I know now, loved me; but then, in those far distant days, his English nature seemed cold and passionless when judged by my hot Southern blood. His kindness I considered neglect. His calm, pure affection seemed, in my eyes, the offspring of regret. It was then the tempter came to me—to rob me of the Paradise of home. At every turn he filled my mind with suspicions. Jealousy robbed me of my senses, and in every act of my husband I read treachery and deceit."

"Poor woman!"

"Ah! poor indeed, for my madness I lost everything:—home, love, child. At last I found, in my husband's desk, letters that I believed to have been written by a rival. Again the tempter was at my side, and I left my husband's home. An accident, however, proved to me that I had been deceived. The tempter dropped a copy of one of the fatal letters, and then I saw that I had been duped. The villain admitted the deception, and pointed out that my course was taken; it was then too late to retrace my steps. He was only right. It was too late to return to my husband; it was not too late to save my honor—the honor I would have sacrificed for revenge. I left the man who had so bitterly deceived me, and would have gone back to my home had I dared. But my husband's scorn seemed to hard to bear. I could not look upon my child, to find that he had been thought to turn away from me as I called him to my bosom with outstretched arms. It was too late. I sold my jewels, lived how I could, hurried from table to table, gambled, called gamblers to me—and you see me here. Tell me, do you think my husband would have forgotten me had he known all?"

"Were he such a man as my father was—a thousand times yes."

She sighed a sigh of deep relief, and murmuring, "I must tell him now," said: "And now I have to unfold a secret involving the happiness of your whole life."

"You have a secret to tell me?" he exclaimed.

She hesitated painfully. "Frank, suppose your mother was such as I? Suppose she, too, had left her home—had sunk lower and lower, until you found her here?"

"Madame," he cried, rising angrily to his feet, "you insult me!"

"You are angry with me?"

"Yes," he said, and his cheeks glowed. "You have dared to breath the name of a saint. You! who stand self-accused, degraded, an outcast and a sinner!"

"I do not understand you."

"Heaven forgive me," he continued, passing his hand over his brow, "for speaking of her in a house such as this. Pure as an angel, she floats before my eyes in the glory of an ideal—of an ideal only, alas! as I never knew her."

"Of whom do you speak?"

He replied with infinite tenderness, "I speak of my mother."

Her heart was beating, her cheeks a feverish red. She could scarcely stand. At last she said: "Your mother—an angel—a saint?"

"Yes," he continued, speaking rather to himself than to her, "how often have I heard the story of her noble life! She was the guide, the better angel, of my father. How bitterly he grieved when she left him!"

"She did leave him?" she said quickly.

"Yes—at my birth, to join the angels in Heaven. My poor mother! although you have been dead to me, your gentle spirit has watched over me. Even now her memory recalls me to my better self. Why do I stay in this hateful house?"

She was crying now. She said: "Who told you of this noble life—of your mother?"

"My father."

She sank upon her knees, crying bitterly. She thought; "He has spared my memory—that memory so clearly prized by our son. I cannot claim my heritage of shame!"

"You are crying," he said gently. "You are thinking of my want of gratitude in wishing to leave this house where you have nursed me so tenderly. You must forgive me. I am selfish and inconsiderate."

Her face remained buried in her hands. She was crying bitterly as she murmured: "He is near me, and yet I dare not clasp him to my arms. Heaven have pity on me!"

He approached her, and said: "But you told me just now you possessed a secret involving the whole happiness of my life."

She paused a moment, and then rose with supernatural calmness.

"The gentleman who was with me this morning brought good news."

"You mean Dr. Blunt?"

"I mean Dr. Blunt. He come to tell me that the consent of the father of your fiancee had been obtained."

As she said these words his eyes brightened with joy. He seemed to be filled with new life every moment.

"Is it really true?" he cried. "All my strength comes back to me. Kate, my darling, my love!"

"How soon he forgets me!" she murmured.

"And when shall I see Dr. Blunt?" he asked excitedly. "Is he to come back?"

"He has promised to be back in half an hour."

He arose without assistance, and walked towards the door. "I must be ready to leave with him. See, I am quite strong. Bless you for the glorious news you have brought to me!"

When she was alone she knelt down and poured out her whole heart.

"He does not know me!" she cried. "Oh, Heaven! how heavily I am punished!"

"You see I am here."

It was the doctor who had just entered the room. She rose with her eyes red from weeping, her bosom heaving with emotion.

He looked at her with pity, and said. "You have spoken with your son?"

"I have spoken with my son."

"And he knows."

"Nothing."

He took her hand. "You have acted bravely. Believe me, it is for the best. But you are suffering."

"I cannot live long, I know," she murmured. "But silence before him. Let him think that his mother really died."

"You have my promise," replied the doctor earnestly. "But we must not leave you now—you are very ill."

"No, no!" she said, hurriedly. "Hush! —he is here—not a word before him."

Frank entered the room and strode toward the doctor with outstretched arms.

"I am overjoyed!" he cried. "Oh, doctor! is it really true?"

"Yes," said his guardian, bluntly, "You may be married as soon as you please."

"I congratulate you," murmured Madame La Fontaine—her voice seemed to be growing weaker and weaker."

"Is there nothing I can do to show my gratitude?"

"Nothing. I am very happy. You are going to marry the girl you love—before you is a life full of hope. It would have pleased your poor mother, who was so good,—your mother who died long ago. She paused and placed her hand on her heart. She spoke with difficulty. "But before you go I want you to say four words: 'Mother, I forgive you.' Come, it is not asking you for much."

Frank looked at the doctor, and the doctor whispered, "You had better humor her."

He took her hand, and their eyes met: "Mother, I forgive you!"

She kissed his hand: "Heaven bless you!" Then she turned to the doctor and whispered "He must never know."

"Water!" cried Frank alarmed at the change which had come over her face. "Quick! she has fainted."

"You are wrong," said Dr. Blunt, with tears in his honest, manly eyes. "She has not fainted, Frank. Poor woman!—she is now dead!"—London Society.
